Total sale counts of domains in NNNN .com and one-word English .com categories fell to 4-quarter lows.

The world is experiencing uncertainty and hardship due to the unprecedented coronavirus pandemic. In Q1 2020, cash was indeed king for many investors, who were selling everything from stocks to bonds to gold to bitcoins aiming to raise cash. Under the circumstance, many premium domain owners were more motivated to sell; however, most premium domain buyers suspended their purchases or lowered their budget substantially. The drop in premium domain sales should not come as a surprise.

The coronavirus shows little sign of slowing down in many areas in the world, so the negative impact on the premium domain aftermarket might last for a while, but there is hope ahead.

A bright spot in the Q1 data: The end-user purchase rate of one-word English .com domains showed year-over-year growth and climbed to 41.67% in Q1 2020 from 25.8% in Q1 2018. End users are still actively buying domain names. Businesses adapt to the pandemic by moving online. There will be a higher demand for premium domains from end-users. The new online businesses probably will start with hand registered domains or low priced aftermarket domains. Some of the companies will choose to upgrade their domain names to premium ones when their online business flourish, and they have money to spend.
